Dear Mr. Williams,

I'd completely forgotten about that material in "The Espionage Establishment", which I have. I do not have the "New Mandarins" or "The Great Rebel" and cannot afford to buy either now. If the latter has no more than the Congo, it will not interest me. Other things will. However, if it is ever possible for you to xerox the appropriate pages, I'd certainly like to have them for future use.

I agree with you on Boxley, have never believed otherwise, and am inclined to believe he contrived the CIA association, that it did not exist.

True, publication prospects are better on a straight CIA book, but others are working in that field. There is no one doing what I am and I regard the subject as more important. If I were in this for commercial considerations, I'd have been out long ago.

The four printed books are like the visible part of the iceberg. I've got more books than those, in extent, written and several others in various stages of development, each one far enough along so that, were it possible, I could do each without further research and turn out a credible job. Of course, I am always continuing my inquiries.

Many thanks. Hope you have a good holiday.

Sincerely,

Harold Weisberg
